2017 ANNUAL REPORT

THE GROWING PROBLEM OF JAILING THE MENTALLY ILL

Jails have become an essential part of Virginia's mental health system.
-VA. IG report 2014

FROM THE DESK OF SHERIFF MORGAN

Dear Citizens,

There is a crisis in our jails. A 2014 Virginia Inspector General's report has become the definitive statement on this issue: "One in four inmates in local and regional jails was known, or suspected, to be mentally ill, making Virginia's jails one of the Commonwealth's largest providers of mental health services for persons with mental illness."

Among the reasons, fewer state and private hospital beds and an inadequate network of community-based services, according to the State Compensation Board's 2015 report on Mental Illness in Jails.

Before my tenure, an inmate deemed to have mental illness viciously attacked a deputy inside the city jail. He lost an eye, his cheekbones were shattered; he endured many surgeries. He survived the attack, but he could no longer perform the duties of a deputy sheriff. As he said, "I lost an eye. I also lost my career, one that I was proud to have."

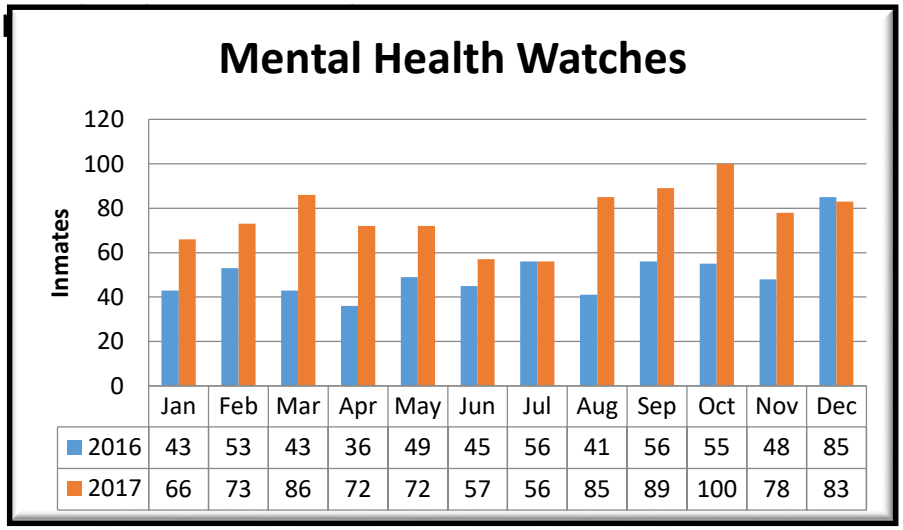

We now have training to understand and be better equipped to deal with the complicated and special circumstances created by the incarceration of the mentally ill.

A January 2018 report from Gov. Ralph Northam's Mental Health Policy Council, which I co-chair, recommended increasing the state's mental health workforce, utilizing electronic health records and expanding the way the state funds mental health services.

Until lawmakers look directly into the new face of inmates, serious change to help these most vulnerable among us will elude us.

The purpose of jail is to punish, to protect the community from those do bad things. Having a mental health issue is not a crime. Fewer state and private hospital beds and an inadequate network of community-based services has increasingly caused people with mental illness to enter Virginia's jails, the State Compensation Board wrote in its 2015 report on Mental Illness in Jails.

Stabilizing them almost always requires expensive medication; they also require increased supervision and attention from deputies and

In 2017, the NNSO staff dealt with more than 900 mental health watches, half of which required 15-minute checks to ensure an inmate's safety. That's up 50% from 2016.

It's a fact that the mentally ill are more likely to receive better care behind bars than they get on the street. In 2013, the Virginia Inspector General visited 25 of the state's 62 local and regional jails. The bottom line of his report issued in 2014 has become the definitive statement on this issue: "One in four inmates in local and regional jails was known, or suspected, to be mentally ill—making Virginia's jails one of the Commonwealth's largest providers of mental health services for persons with mental illness."

The jail environment is stressful and that can aggravate a person's illness. A 2006 Bureau of Justice report states that mentally ill inmates are more likely to violate rules and be involved in altercations and staff assaults than typical inmates.

As psychiatric hospitals were shut down or closed, the mentally ill had to be cared for somewhere else. Where would they go? Often, those men and women who break the law wind up in jails.

That answer is not good enough, but it is easy enough.

Having a mental health issue is not a crime. If you did not have that mental health issue, would you be in jail? That is one of the many challenging questions we are looking at and having to deal with.

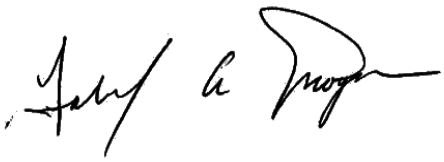

Until lawmakers look directly into the new face of inmates, serious change to help the most vulnerable among us will elude us.

There is a cost to treatment and programs, but it can benefit our communities by having a person return home better able to be a contributing member of society.

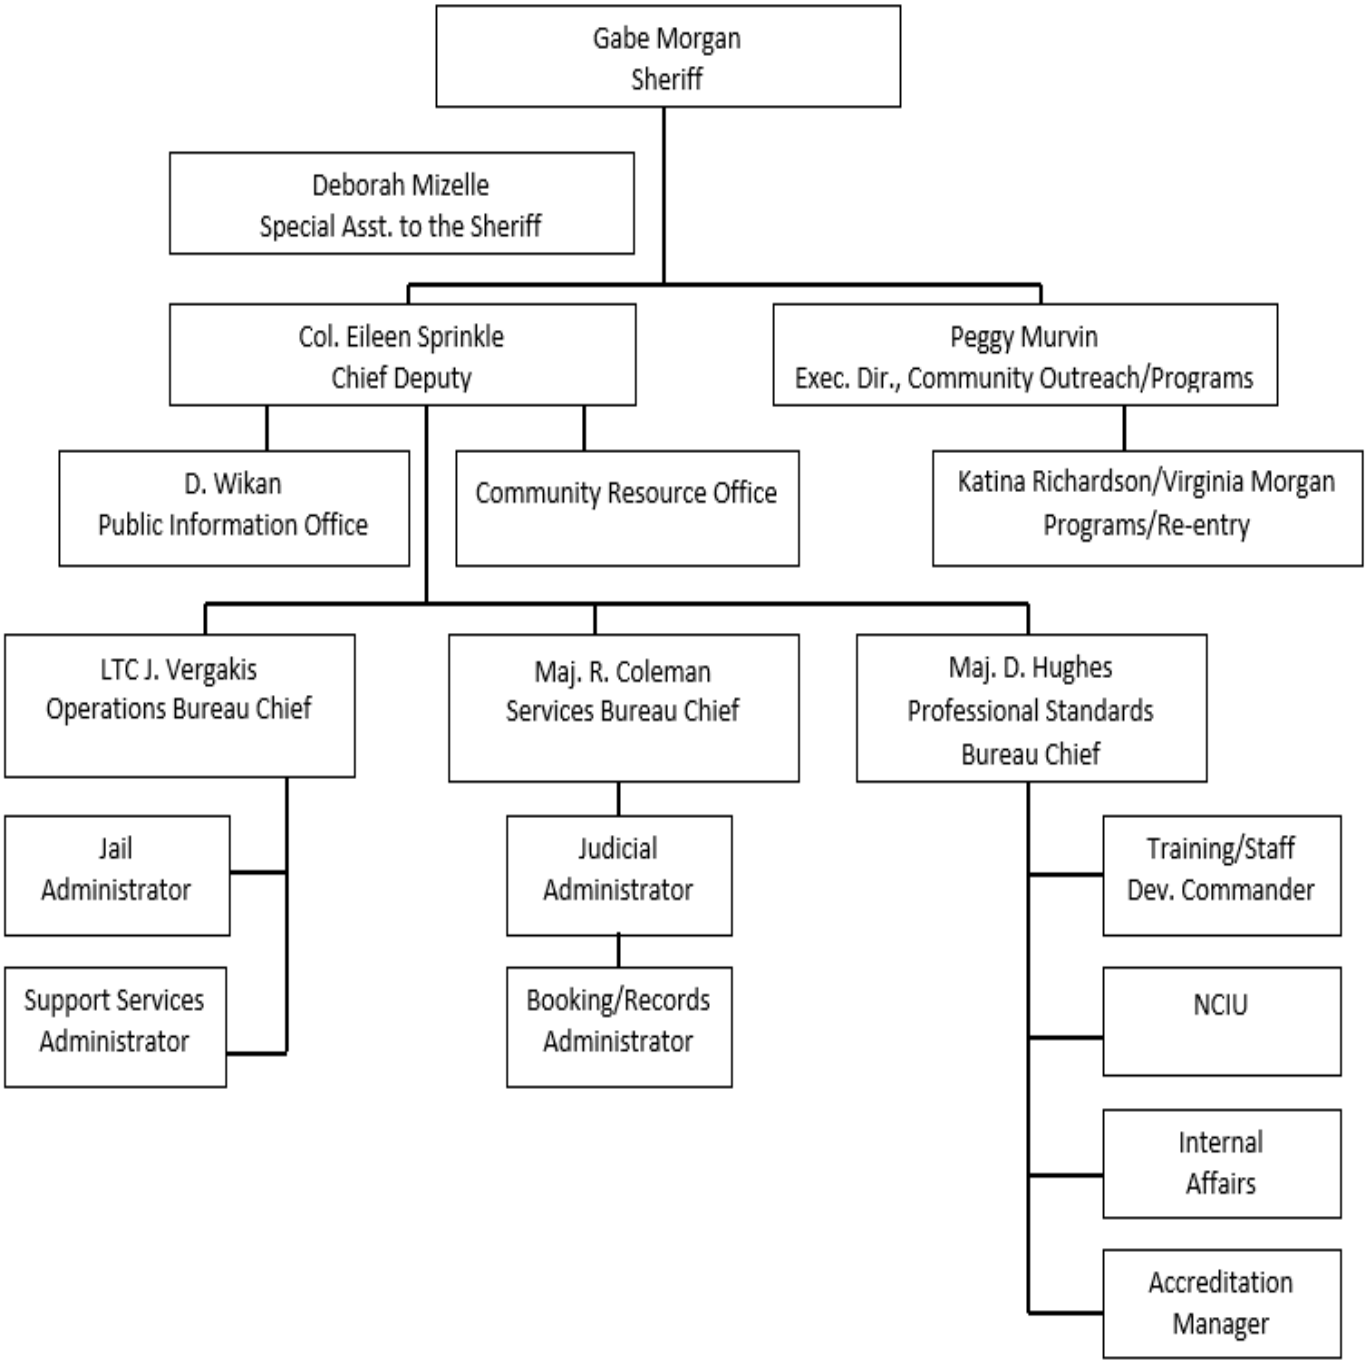

The arrest is a symptom of an underlying issue. For example, someone will be released and will return to doing what he was doing before because we never addressed the issue. It must be about how do we best prepare them to re-enter and take their rightful place as a contributing citizen.

In January 2018, a report from Gov. Ralph Northam's Mental Health Policy Council, which I co-chair, recommended increasing the state's mental health workforce, utilizing electronic health records and expanding the way the state funds mental health services.

In the meantime, the fight for better services for inmates who struggle with mental illness continues.
